4TH SUNDAY OF LENT

Excerpt from a homily by Fr. Carl Kelly, OMI

On each of the first three Sundays of Lent, we were reminded of the covenant that God has made with us, the covenant by which God becomes our God and we become God's people. The covenant on the first Sunday of Lent was spoken through the story of Noah and how God gave the rainbow as the sign of the covenant. Then we had the story of Abraham and Isaac, and how God entered into a new covenant with Abraham. Last Sunday we remembered the Sinai covenant. The commandments were brought to their full realization in Jesus. He is the guide of how we are to live if we are to be God's people. That is a commitment made by the people who presented us for baptism, and which we have reaffirmed by our lives. The readings today instruct us, in a very helpful way about sin: about how God is always waiting to be gracious to us, to forgive us, and to heal us. The first reading today reminds us of how the people were unfaithful, following the example of the nations around them and so they defiled the house which God had made holy. The God of their ancestors continued to send prophets to warn the people. But they rejected God's word and so devastation came upon them. They refused to heed God's call to reject violence and war, and they were taken off into exile for seventy long years. For the people of the Old Testament, the whole period of the exile was one of great growth in religious maturity, and the development of the people of God. This was a wonderful blessing.

Jesus said it was through his death, his being crucified, or raised up, that the people would have new life and the forgiveness of their sins. In the second reading, Paul says: "God, who is rich in mercy, out of the great love with which he loved us even when we were dead through our trespasses, made us alive together with Christ—for it is by grace you have been saved." What took place through the death and resurrection of Jesus was that all things are now changed. Paul gives us a vision that is wider and deeper than anything we could imagine.

These readings prepare us for the statement made by John, which contains the central point of the Christian faith: "God so loved the world that he sent his only-begotten Son so that those who believe in him may not perish, but have life everlasting." Here is our gospel. Its Good News is that God loves the world, and, not only does God love it, but freely gave it his most precious gift, his Son. God insists that the world is lovable and that God loved it first. The message implies that it's a matter of uncovering and celebrating the signs of the presence of God.

Joseph Mary Plunkett's poem, I See His Blood Upon The Rose, interprets John's Gospel passage for us:

"I see his blood upon the rose
And in the stars the glory of his eyes,
His body gleams amid eternal snows,
His tears fall from the skies.
I see his face in every flower;
The thunder and the singing of the birds
Are but his voice and carven by his power
Rocks are his written words.
All pathways by his feet are worn,
His strong heart stirs the ever-beating sea,
His crown of thorns is twined with every thorn,
His cross is every tree."

That's the poet's view of our Gospel. God is not apart from the world but rather in it because God created it and loved it and sent Jesus into it. And in spite of all the evils that obscure the vision of God, God is here and we must learn to be alert to the Spirit and to the Spirit's hidden, everyday grace. A God of mercy directs all that happens to us. Our faith tells us that God has an eternal plan. It is our faith that enables us to make some sense of what happens to us. And that is what will help us see the working plan of God in our lives.

VOCATION REFLECTION

"Compelled by God's Love", by Richard Beaudette, OMI
"The Word of God for this Fourth Sunday of Lent invites and challenges us to reflect on our own experiences of God's love for us. Each of us will have our own unique experiences, but we are reminded that God's love is poured out on all people. As we experience this gift of love, we are invited to respond."
